A SMART pick-up in attendance was the final drawing of "Polly of the Circus" at the Hipp last night, and the laughter that followed the bits of comedy and the stillness that marked the climaxes all indicate that the company got their story over in convincing shape. Tom Casey went back on his name last night though, for we looked in vain for a shamrock on his manly bosom. He probably thought, however that Mabel Cassidy whose bonnet was securely tied on with ribbons of St. Patrick's hue, and Phil Mayer who besides the shamrock carried a green flag at mast were good enough representatives for the company. Miss Kennedy showed her colors by playing "Wearing of the Green" as an introduction for Phil Mayer's Scotch specialty which was enjoyed by Phil as much as by the witty pianist. The success of "Polly of the Circus" is attributed in no small degree to Bun Davis who takes a wonderfully strong blowing part in the circus scene. Bun says he hasn't had so much fun since the county fair 15 years ago this fall, and the way he shoved air into that green balloon whistle convinced us he spoke the truth. For the latter part of the week Mr. Casey is giving us "The Girl He Couldn't Buy," a story of strong melodramatic interest.

What is 13th Commandment? Instead of calling Ethel Clayton's latest starring vehicle, "The 13th Commandment," it might have been safely named "Money," because that is what the whole story is about. The working of the drama is confined to the circles of refined society folk, and the splendor of their surroundings is always in evidence. The story will undoubtedly please most spectators. The writer had in mind the idea, why shouldn't a woman become self-reliant before she marries and be able to earn her own living.

Aside from one or two overdrawn scenes, the story is well told. Ethel Clayton is admirable in the role of Daphne Kip, the heroine.

Underworld Paris Exposed. Underworld life in Paris is the locale of "L'Apache," a five-reel picture produced under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince and starring Dorothy Dalton. The plot is melodramatic with many strong situations, and intelligent care has been taken to give the scenes the proper local color. Part of the action which passes in the apartment of the villain of the story has been over-stressed, and there are a few minor points of direction which might have been improved.

The good qualities of the picture, however, are more than enough to carry it to success. It shows again the truth of the old adage, "The wages of sin is death," and it illustrates the danger to a young girl without the safeguard of a strong moral character who goes to Paris to gain a musical education and coming in contact with the Bohemian life of the gay city, "L'Apache" is not a Sunday school story, but it does not misrepresent vice or give an alluring or false picture of the glamour and folly of the wine, woman and song theory of existence. The scenario is well put together and the interest holds firmly, although it is easy to forecast what use will be made of the close resemblance between the two women played by the star.

As the French dancer and the American musical student, Dorothy Dalton has two widely contrasting roles. Her denotement of the characteristics of both women is equally clear cut and convincing, and she endows both types with ample physical attraction. Macy Harlan as Jean Bourget, an Apache, is the best representative of the French gangster the screen has ever known. He accomplishes the artistic triumph known as "living the part," and creates an illusion that is without a flaw.

"L'APACHE"

The lights of Paris had lured her too far. In her reckless quest of pleasure, she found it was but a step from the gay haunts of the Boulevards to the murky of the world of the Apaches.

This man had shown her "Life" Now he was proving how men like him treat women like her—Apache love, Apache hate, and then the Apache dagger!

"Nothing unusual in this case," said the law. "Just a woman's revenge upon the man who wronged her." And the law was a thousand miles from the truth. Don't miss Dorothy Dalton in this vivid, intimate story of the "other half" of Paris.

Just the Thing for Parties.

Just Suppose

that you were a pure-minded and attractive young girl, and through unfortunate circumstances were compelled to eke your way through life clerking for a meagre wage which enabled you to barely exist in a hall bedroom.

And Suppose

that one day a man—not a good man, but a rich man—knocked at your door and offered to conduct you to a palatial home, to "finance" you, and to do everything possible to make you a thing of beauty—his thing of beauty.

And Then Suppose

that one night while you were hesitating between right and wrong, another man knocked at your door—not a rich man, but a "cracksman," a high class thief who robbed rich men because earlier in his life, on account of having been accused and convicted of a crime of which he was innocent, the police would not permit him to make a living in any other way.

SUPPOSE

HE DID YOU A GOOD TURN, and suppose he offered to FIGHT for you, to PROTECT you, to LIVE for you, to REFORM for you, and to LOVE you in the RIGHT WAY.
